May 29 	May 30	May 31	 Color My Plate: Farmer's Markets When the weather gets warmer, many communities operate farmer's markets. A farmer's market is a place where local farmers sell fruits, vegetables, and other foods directly to consumers. It's a fun and inexpensive way to purchase fresh produce. It's also a great way to support the local economy. To find a farmer's market near you, visit the website for your state's Department of Agriculture.

Around the World in a Lunch Period – Mexico

On May 5, commemorate the Mexican victory over the French at the Battle of Puebla. Join the Culinary Explorations team for Cinco de Mayo! This holiday is actually more popular in the United States than it is in Mexico with people throwing parties and chowing down on everything from chalupas to guacamole. In honor of the occasion, we will serve a special meal of chicken crispitos, special homemade rice, and fan favorite slushies. Did you know . . .

- Staples of Mexican cooking include corn, tomatoes, avocados, beans, chili peppers, meats, cheeses, and rice?
- There are regional differences in cuisine based on geography and local ingredients?
- Vendors in Mexico sell famous "street food" such as gorditas, tamales, and elotes?
- The United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) has designated traditional Mexico cuisine an Intangible Cultural Heritage?

¡Buen provecho!

BREAKFAST BUZZ

Did you know that school breakfast helps students concentrate?

Stop by the cafeteria every day and pick up something to eat. It might help you get higher grades and better test scores.
